

Department of Defense Intellectual Property Forum 2023

Noah Tevis

Deputy General Counsel – Intellectual Property

Noah Tevis is Deputy General Counsel - Intellectual Property at Bell Textron Inc. In this role, Noah is responsible for all aspects of Intellectual Property across the Commercial and Military programs, as well as Innovation. He advises the business on USG contracting with a signification focus on rights in technical data and computer software. He capitalizes on his previous experience as an aerospace engineer on large aerospace defense programs to help both the technical and business teams navigate the complex IP nuances within Department of Defense procurements. Noah places special emphasis on the U.S. Army's Future Vertical Lift programs.

He began his career as an engineer at Lockheed Martin and Bell prior to graduating from A&M University School of Law. He started his legal career preparing and prosecuting patent applications at a small patent boutique law firm before joining Bell as in-house counsel.